Sculptural elements

“I’ve always loved a sculptural element of some kind in every room. It just brings a certain air of intrigue and sophistication to the space. A thoughtfully placed asymmetrical sofa silhouette bends the footprint in an unexpected way, while a faceted reflective cabinet or a Brancusi sculpture on a simple white plinth signals loud and clear that you are more individualistic in your approach to decoration. Two of my favorite faceted or sculptural pieces are the DC1611 Cabinet from Vincenzo De Cotiis and the Vermeer Coffee Table from Roberto Cavalli.” —Windsor Smith, interior designer
